MISSION STATEMENT

West Neighbourhood House has as its central purpose the enabling of less-advantaged individuals, families, and groups in the community to gain greater control over their lives and within their communities.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES

West Neighbourhood House works in partnership with the community to promote personal and social change in order to achieve a safe, healthy, and accepting society for all. To this end, we will work with our resources and the strengths of the community to:

- build bridges within and across communities;
- promote access to full participation in society by addressing barriers such as illiteracy, inadequate incomes, unaffordable housing, and discrimination of all types;
- assist people to meet individual and family needs;
- provide the tools and opportunities for people to gain greater control over their lives and to take on leadership in the community; and
- advocate for changes in social systems that will ensure dignity, quality of life, and equal opportunities for all.

STRATEGIC PRIORITIES

- Produce the most positive impact possible.
- Preserve community benefits for perpetuity.
- Reposition the House in the community to respond to rapid and profound external changes.

COVID-19 RESPONSE

It's been a year of big changes — and we're just getting started

Up until the pandemic, West Neighbourhood House staff, volunteers, partners, and community members worked side by side — physically as well as figuratively — to create personal and social change. You will see much of that work reflected in this report. COVID-19 transformed our community and the House during the last three weeks of our fiscal year.

All of us had to pivot quickly in early March to an entirely new world of physical distancing, personal protective equipment, infection prevention, mass unemployment, and closed public spaces.

Our team moved with incredible speed, creativity, co-operation and care to transition to providing support over the phone or online. We maintained in-person contact in our essential services: home supports for seniors from our dedicated Personal Support Workers, Meals on Wheels, and the Meeting Place drop-in for homeless people. To the essential staff who kept these programs going, thank you.

We will tell more about our work during the pandemic in next year's Annual Report. For now, we want to say our incredible, strong relationships and tradition of collaboration helped make this transformation possible. We've received tremendous support from donors, volunteers, partners, and funders such as the United Way. This enabled us to provide uninterrupted care to diverse people facing isolation, loss of income, and fear, on top of the pre-pandemic issues of poverty and inequality. To all our supporters and partners, thank you.

The Board has been meeting virtually throughout this crisis. They continue to fiercely support the House and take great pride in its work.

We are all in this together — all the time, not just in a pandemic. ◀

WORKING TOGETHER APART

We pivot quickly to online learning for newcomer youth

It's Tuesday at 5 p.m. and Jovie Galit, the Team Leader for the Newcomer Youth program, is leading a mindful after-school arts activity. A group of participants, who range in age from 13 to 24, follows along as she demonstrates how to decorate a greeting card. "The good thing about drawing flowers is you don't need straight lines," she says.

Normally, this would take place at our youth space in Parkdale or a local school. Now it's streaming live on Instagram and Facebook.

Over just a few days in March, the program pivoted to being entirely virtual. Helped along by its already vibrant social-media presence, it remained a steady source of support for newcomer youth.

The program now offers at least five online activities a week — including hip-hop dance, Spanish lessons, crafts, homework help, and more. Most sessions start with an informal check-in so youth can catch up and get encouragement from each other and the facilitators.

They've needed it. Some youth are caring for younger siblings full-time while schools are closed. Extra time at home has brought up complicated feelings for youth who've recently reunited with their families after a long separation due to immigration issues.

"Families haven't had time to unpack and heal, and now they're isolating together," Jovie says. "We support them through that and try to be mindful that the youth sometimes don't understand what they're feeling."

All year long, staff and volunteers work hard to create a safe space for youth to learn and process their feelings. Now they are creating it virtually, and as participant Claire says, "They make a boring pandemic day fun." <

ECONOMIC DIGNITY

We fight the systems that keep people in poverty

Economic life in Toronto is changing, and we must change with it. To afford a two-bedroom apartment in our city today, you need to earn $34 per hour.

“We can no longer be satisfied with finding someone any old minimum wage job, or just connecting people to their benefits,” says Jeff Klein, our

Director of Community Economic Strategies.

In 2019, we started transforming our financial empowerment and employment and training programs to go beyond relieving poverty, to start helping people build better lives with economic dignity.

Economic dignity means more than having enough money to live. It means having a life that is financially secure and allows you to be healthy, happy, and able to pursue your goals in a meaningful way.

Economic dignity means freedom from financial stress that can make you physically sick. It also means protection from financial scams, predatory lending practices, and exploitative work conditions. It means fighting the systems that entrench people in poverty. It means supporting people to build a personal safety net that will see them through emergencies and life changes and help them take care of their families in the future.

Our first step in this transformation is to make sure everyone who comes to West Neighbourhood House for training or employment help also gets the chance to work with a financial coach. People with higher incomes take for granted that they can get long-term, personalized support from a knowledgeable financial professional. Our program aims to provide that service for the people who need it most.

We’re also committing to better data collection, so we can celebrate progress, integrate evidence into our work, and assess our impact over time. <

Our FEPS program puts money in people’s pockets and back into the local economy.

THE COMPASS PROJECT

We learn new skills to build the House of the future

West Neighbourhood House is 108 years old. We don't want to get set in our ways and fail to adapt to change. Enter the Compass program.

In 2019, under the guidance of Marjorie Brans and Chryssa Loulis from Toronto's School for Social Entrepreneurs, 11 staff members participated in a custom-designed program that helped them think like entrepreneurs and to experiment with projects for the House of the future.

Compass was made possible by a donation from Mark Satov, a former West Neighbourhood House board member and founder of Satov Consultants.

Marjorie Brans

Mark Satov

Mark vividly remembers the first time he visited West Neighbourhood House, then St. Christopher House, at 248 Ossington Ave. "It is just this grassroots, do-good to organization that has a direct connection with the people it serves," he says. "Everybody's so engaged and passionate ... for me, and I imagine for everybody, it's all well and good to live in a modern digital world, but we crave human contact. And the House has always been a place where you get a lot of human contact."

Some of the projects that came out of Compass include a plan to integrate a "coaching culture" in the employment and training programs and across the House. Through Compass, Angela Barrass, Coordinator of employment services, was inspired her to get training in peer coaching. It's method of non-judgemental open-ended discussion that focuses on a single problem and asks the person being coached to decide on solutions. This empowers them to follow through and create change.

Veronica Nascimento came up with a particularly timely Compass project. As Coordinator of the Home at Last program, she was troubled by how little we integrate the input of Personal Support Workers (PSWs) into our work across the House. PSWs play a crucial role on the healthcare frontlines, but their voices are seldom heard when it comes to shaping the policies that affect them and the people they care for. Veronica spoke to PSWs and brainstormed ways to make sure they are heard and retained. She came up with the idea to hold forums where PSWs could talk about their experiences, knowledge, and challenges in a judgement-free environment.

These are just two projects that came out of Compass, thanks to the School for Social Entrepreneurs and Mark's support.

Mark's interest in non-profit work dates back to his days as a kid helping his mother deliver Meals on Wheels. He asked that we pass on a message from him: He wants to encourage others who can give to start thinking of themselves as potential philanthropists — and he doesn't just mean millionaires.

"If you're a professional person, you may need to be reminded that relative to the average, you're quite lucky and can afford to give a fair bit. Even something you don't think of as fair bit, actually would go a long way," he says. ◀

COVID-19

We adapt quickly to a world of distancing and protective gear

Over just a few days in March, the COVID-19 pandemic totally transformed the House. Essential in-person work, including the Meeting Place drop-in for homeless folks, Meals on Wheels and seniors' supports, adapted to a new world of physical distancing and personal protective equipment.

Most programs switched to offering supports online and over the phone. Now we're busy planning for a post-pandemic future — one where we are more resilient and better able to serve the most marginalized people in our community. Executive Director Maureen Fair offers some reflections on our response so far.

We were (relatively) ready

Pandemic preparedness was on our radar long before this year. We knew about hygiene and personal protection equipment, thanks to guidance from our funders at the Ministry of Health and our experience dealing with infection control in seniors' programs.

When the pandemic was declared, we had a three-week supply of masks and gloves on hand and our high-risk frontline staff had all been fitted with appropriate PPE. The Meeting Place, unlike many Toronto drop-ins, has remained open throughout COVID-19. We were even able to share supplies with other social-service organizations.

Everyone entering the Meeting Place is screened.

We can do better

Working over the phone and online, we realized something important — many people had been falling through the cracks. We need to do more outreach to the most vulnerable members of our communities.

This was especially evident in seniors' programs. "Doing all this phone work has helped us develop many more and deeper relationships with people who are too frail to come in," Maureen says.

The post-pandemic future

We need a simpler system for funding community social services, now more than ever. West Neighbourhood House gratefully receives 17 different sources of government funding, and each one comes with different targets and reporting obligations.

The Meeting Place is one of few Toronto drop-ins to stay open throughout the pandemic, for members like Indigenous artist Nanuk.

During the pandemic, these have been relaxed. Funders told us to do whatever we can to meet the community's needs. That's how we were able to respond so quickly and nimbly — and it should be how things are all the time, Maureen says.

"Give us one envelope of money and let us tell you what we can do with it, instead of funding in this fragmented, siloed way." <

NEIGHBOURHOOD CARE TEAM

We partner to provide seamless health care to the most vulnerable

West Neighbourhood House

recently completed its first full year as the lead agency for the Roncevalles Neighbourhood Care Team. NCTs are local partnerships of health providers that work together to provide seamless health care services to the most vulnerable, isolated people in need. Ours is based at our supportive housing office at 20 West Lodge.

NCTs work at the level of a city block or apartment building. This lets them collect information constantly about what people in the community need and adjust their services accordingly.

Our NCT is designed to address a common problem in community health care: Having services available isn't enough to ensure people will access them.

Many seniors struggle to navigate the health system and keep track of different appointments. The NCT allows them to get care in one place, reducing repetition and gaps, and preventing seniors having to explain their health history to different providers over and over.

The folks the NCT serves — the most vulnerable, marginalized and isolated seniors — often don't reach out for help with health problems. Even if the services they need are close by, they may not know about them.

"There are lots of reasons why people don't engage with what's around them," says Isabel Palmar, our director of older adult programs. "It may be because of mental health, or mobility, language barrier, preference, or someone who is just shy."

So, each month, the NCT holds a drop-in at West Lodge. It's advertised posters in six languages, and it always include snacks, a presentation from a local health provider, and an opportunity to register with the NCT. And music. It turns out music is really important.

"Seniors will stick around through the presentation, until we're packing things up and we put the music on so they can dance," Isabel says. "It's the farthest thing from a waiting room at a doctor's office." <

Seniors participate in a brain fitness activity to test their wits and help them stay sharp!

Dance-Ability is a multi-generational fitness group. Every Wednesday, we gather and move to the music — sometimes Drake, sometimes 1950s showtunes — at our own pace by the light of a disco ball.

■ Highlights of the 2019-2020 year

- Supported more than 1,500 seniors and people with disabilities in their homes through: 50,266 hours of personal and home care; 33,290 days of care for assisted living and supportive housing residents and 8,195 security checks
- Transported 363 individuals who are unable to travel by TTC and are ineligible for Wheel Trans to medical appointments, activities and day programs
- Supported over 450 family caregivers through 1,983 consultations, 7,555 attendance days for 144 seniors in the Adult Day program, and 5,489 hours of respite care for seniors in their own homes
- Through our Home at Last (HAL) Program and with nine partner agencies, assisted 1,675 seniors with no family supports to transition safely home from hospital

New volunteers learn about how strengthening literacy in the community contributes to social justice

ADVOCATES FOR THE COMMUNITY

We collaborate to create change from the ground up

Collaboration is part of everything we do. In partnership with others in the community, we worked on affordable housing, civic engagement, and neighbour-to-neighbour mutual aid this year.

Here's what was achieved in collaboration with participants, volunteers, neighbours, partners, and stakeholders:

- Our 988 volunteers delivered meals, visited seniors in their homes, supported learning, completed taxes, and much more.
- We worked with Build a Better Bloor Dufferin to win significant contributions for affordable housing, community space, and a non-profit land trust as a condition of redevelopment on former public-school lands at Bloor and Dufferin streets.
- In response to a development application at Bloor and Dundas, we organized two affordable housing forums, engaging 74 residents and media.
- Facilitated five community consultations and engaged 50 diverse community members in the development of the City of Toronto's new ten-year housing plan.
- With policy expert John Stapleton, community financial workers, informal workers, and adult learners, we developed a financial education campaign for informal workers.
- Held five "Getting to Know Your Government" workshops for 110 residents, held drop-ins to help 35 seniors and Meeting Place members with guidance about voting, and moderated a candidates' debate in partnership with the Parkdale Residents' Association.
- With the Parkdale People's Economy, we co-facilitated two working groups and co-authored the "Community Wealth Building Report," a framework for how communities can leverage repayable investments.
